Additional Counsel for Appellant

Pursuant to Rules 221(a), 221(c), and/or 260(a), SCACR, FFC¹ hereby petitions this Honorable Court for reinstatement of this appeal and/or rehearing and reconsideration of this matter, which it decided via order filed March 10, 2022, dismissing the appeal (the “Order of Dismissal”).

INTRODUCTION

As previously explained in FFC’s memo on appealability, filed January 21, 2022, and reiterated below, the trial court orders challenged in this interlocutory appeal (collectively, the “Appealed Orders”²) are properly before this Court for appellate review pursuant to S.C. Code Ann. § 14-3-330, because they are immediately appealable under § 14-3-330(1) as orders “involving the merits” and/or under § 14-3-330(2) as orders that deprive FFC of “a mode of trial to which it is entitled as a matter of right”³ and/or as orders that “strike[] out an answer or any part thereof.” Most respectfully, as explained below, in dismissing this appeal the Court overlooked or misapprehended a number of material points.

² Specifically, the Appealed Orders are the Order Denying Defendant’s Motion to Dismiss Amended Class Action Complaint, filed August 19, 2021 (the “Primary Order”), and the Order filed November 8, 2021, denying FFC’s motion to alter, amend, and/or reconsider the Primary Order (the “Secondary Order”).

³ Flagstar Corp. v. Royal Surplus Lines, 341 S.C. 68, 72, 533 S.E.2d 331, 333 (2000) (“Pursuant to § 14-3-330(2), this Court has held on numerous occasions that when a trial court’s order deprives a party of a mode of trial to which it is entitled to as a matter of right, such order is immediately appealable.”).

BACKGROUND

In October of 2007, Mr. Delaney⁴ borrowed money (about $8,500) from FFC pursuant to a retail installment contract for the purchase of a truck, promising to pay FFC back over a 36-month term and granting it a security interest in the truck as collateral, thus making FFC a secured creditor under Chapter 9⁵. (*See App.*⁶ pp. 8–9, 15–16, 37.)

Within about six months, however, Mr. Delaney defaulted on the loan (i.e., he stopped paying it back),⁷ prompting FFC to repossess the truck (i.e., the collateral) and “dispose of” it by sale. (See App. pp. 11, 15–16, 38, 63, 66.) But even so, FFC was still left with an unpaid deficiency balance (i.e., a loss) of about $4,200. (App. p. 66.)

In § 36-9-609, Chapter 9 authorizes a secured creditor to repossess collateral after default⁸ and, provided “it proceeds without breach of the peace,” to do so without judicial process. § 36-9-609(b)(2). Here, Mr. Delaney does not challenge

⁴ “Mr. Delaney” is Plaintiff/Respondent, Otha Delaney.

⁶ “App.” refers to the appendix of documentary material that accompanied FFC’s memo on appealability.

⁷ Mr. Delaney admits that he breached the loan contract by failing to repay FFC as promised and that he was in default when FFC repossessed the truck. (App. pp. 15–16.)

either the existence of FFC’s right to repossession or the manner in which it was exercised. (See App. pp. 1–7, 12–13, 35–46.)

In Chapter 9 parlance, FFC’s sale of the repossessed truck is what is known as a “disposition of collateral.” See generally § 36-9-610. In § 36-9-610, Chapter 9 authorizes a secured creditor to “dispose of” collateral in a number of ways, including by sale,⁹ and mandates that “[e]very aspect of a disposition of collateral, including the method, manner, time, place, and other terms, must be commercially reasonable.” § 36-9-610(b). Here, “[Mr. Delaney] is not alleging that [FFC] injured him ‘by disposing of collateral in a commercially unreasonable manner’ in violation of § 36-9-610.” (App. p. 118; see also App. pp. 1–7, 12–13, 35–46.) In fact, he makes no claim at all for actual damages. (See App. pp. 1–7, 12–14, 35–46.)

In § 36-9-611, Chapter 9 requires a secured party who disposes of collateral under § 36-9-610 to send the debtor “a reasonable authenticated notification of disposition” before disposing of the collateral (“Pre-Sale Notice”). § 36-9-611(b). Where, as here, the transaction involves consumer goods, the required contents of Pre-Sale Notice (the “Pre-Sale Notice Content Requirements”) are set forth in §§ 36-9-613 and -614.

On or about May 2, 2008, FFC sent Mr. Delaney Pre-Sale Notice via a two-page Pre-Sale Notice form like the following (which is Exhibit A to the operative complaint,^{10 11} and which is reproduced herein below, beginning, for formatting reasons, on the next page):

¹¹ Exhibit A to the operative complaint is said to be “like” the Pre-Sale Notice that FFC sent Mr. Delaney because it is not an exact copy. Unlike Exhibit A, the Pre-Sale Notice that FFC sent Mr. Delaney (and indeed all of the notices complained about in this case) had the following FFC letterhead at the top of each page:

First Financial Of Charleston, Inc.

5025 DORCHESTER ROAD • P.O. BOX 60429 • CHARLESTON, SC 29419-0429 • (843) 767-0050

(See, e.g., App. pp. 11, 25–28.) But apart from the missing letterhead, Exhibit A displays the same text as the Pre-Sale Notice that FFC sent Mr. Delaney. Indeed, because it is a form document, with only the particulars (name, address, account number, description of collateral, date of mailing) changing from notice to notice, Exhibit A also shows the form text of the Pre-Sale Notice that FFC sent all alleged class members up to October of 2011 when it was served with this lawsuit and stopped using the form. (Please Note: While it stopped using the form of Exhibit A, FFC does not concede that it fails to comply with the Pre-Sale Notice Content Requirements—nor, to be clear, does it concede that any notice about which Mr. Delaney complains in this case fails to comply with Chapter 9.)

RE: Account # 68289

Dear Mr. Delaney,

It is important for you to know that the return of the collateral does not cancel your obligation. If we are required to sell the collateral, we cannot guarantee that we will be able to obtain a price equal to the unpaid balance on your account. You will still owe the amount remaining unpaid balance on your account. You will owe the amount remaining unpaid after application of sale proceeds, less recovery and selling expenses.

Your immediate action on any one of the following alternatives will be to your advantage and may save you further expenses in the settlement of your account.

1. Contact our office and endeavor to redeem the collateral on a basis that would be mutually satisfactory.
2. Refinance your account through your bank, credit union, or another finance company.
3. Find someone who would be acceptable and interested in taking over your obligation and contract.
4. Assist us in finding a buyer to obtain the best possible price.

If acceptable arrangements cannot be made on this matter within the time specified in the attached notice of sale, we will proceed with the sale of this collateral.

Please help yourself by helping us to arrive at a satisfactory solution now.

Very truly yours,

Bob Lewis

Re: Account # 68289

Dear Mr. Delaney,

This is to notify you that due to default under the terms of the above referenced account, the collateral described below, which secures your account, can be sold, at our option by private sale after the close of business on the tenth (10th) day from the date of this notice. If such a date falls on a Sunday or legal holiday, then the collateral will be sold after the first business day following the tenth (10th) day.

You have the right to have the collateral returned to you upon payment of the account balance plus any repossession expenses, attorney's fees and other costs we have incurred, as may be applicable and permitted by law.

In § 36-9-616, Chapter 9 requires a secured party who disposes of collateral under § 36-9-610 to send the debtor a written explanation of the calculation of surplus or deficiency (“Post-Sale Notice”). Section 36-9-616 also sets forth the required contents of such notice (the “Post-Sale Notice Content Requirements”).

The Post-Sale Notice FFC sent Mr. Delaney is Exhibit C to Mr. Delaney’s operative complaint, which is reproduced herein below (for formatting reasons, on the next page):

Mr. Delaney filed this class action against FFC on October 4, 2011. (See App. pp. 1–11.) Mr. Delaney’s original complaint (the “Original Complaint”), which was the operative complaint in the lawsuit for about ten years, asserted a single cause of action against FFC for allegedly sending Pre-Sale Notice that did not comply with the Pre-Sale Notice Content Requirements, thus rendering FFC liable to him—even in the absence of any actual damages (again, he does not actually make a claim for any actual damages in this case)—for statutory damages under § 36-9-625(c)(2) in “an amount not less than the credit service charge plus ten percent of the principal amount of the obligation or the time-price differential plus ten percent of the cash price,” which amount, he says, in his individual case, works out to about $5,500, comprised of some $4,500 corresponding to the total finance charge (i.e., the interest he theoretically would have paid over the life of the loan had he not defaulted—in reality, of course, he did not even pay back the principal as required by the loan contract, much less the interest¹²) and about another $1,000 corresponding to ten percent of the cash price for the truck. (See App. pp. 5, 20.) And, of course, Mr. Delaney seeks to establish such statutory damages liability against FFC not only for himself but also on behalf of the hundreds of alleged class members to whom FFC sent Pre-Sale Notice.

FFC responded to the Original Complaint with a motion to dismiss based on the statute of limitations, which was granted by order filed April 30, 2013, and which Mr. Delaney appealed. A number of years then passed as the appeal proceeded, first through this Court, which affirmed the dismissal in an opinion filed September 28, 2016, then, on writ of certiorari, to the Supreme Court of South Carolina, which ultimately reversed the dismissal in an opinion filed May 8, 2019, and remitted the case to the trial court for further proceedings.

Mr. Delaney filed what is now the operative complaint in the case (the “Amended Complaint”) on March 30, 2021. (See App. pp. 35–46.) Unlike the Original Complaint, the Amended Complaint asserts two causes of action, not just one. The first (Count 1) is the same cause of action asserted in the Original Complaint, for FFC allegedly giving Pre-Sale Notice that failed to comply with the Pre-Sale Notice Content Requirements, by which, as explained, Mr. Delaney does not seek to establish liability against FFC for any alleged actual damages but seeks to render FFC liable for thousands of dollars of statutory liability under § 36-9-625(c)(2), not only to himself individually but also to the hundreds of absent alleged class members on behalf of whom he alone has taken FFC to court. (See App. pp. 44–45.)¹³

The other cause of action (Count 2) is a completely new. Despite having made no mention of it in the Original Complaint he filed nearly a decade prior,¹⁴ Mr. Delaney now alleges that FFC sent him (and likewise hundreds of others claimed to be similarly situated) Post-Sale Notice using a form notice that failed to comply with the Post-Sale Notice Content Requirements, and therefore, pursuant to § 36-9-625(e)(5), seeks to tag FFC with more statutory liability (but still no liability for any alleged actual damages) to himself and to all those on behalf of whom he wishes to proceed at the flat rate of $500 apiece. (See App. pp. 44–45.)

And Mr. Delaney makes all these claims (the unabashed goal of which is to feast on the financial calamity they are designed to try and cause FFC) while at the same time acknowledging (literally, at the very same time, right in the express averments of the Amended Complaint) that at most, i.e., even if FFC did mistakenly send Pre-Sale Notice and Post-Sale Notice that did not technically comply with the respective content requirements, it did so honestly and in good faith, “not intend[ing]

¹³ While Count 1 is the same cause of action as in the Original Complaint, Mr. Delaney does expand it to even complain about a Pre-Sale Notice form that he himself was not sent, namely, Exhibit B to the Amended Complaint (App. p. 65), which is the form that FFC started using to give Pre-Sale Notice when it stopped using the form of Exhibit A.

¹⁴ (See App. pp. 1–11; see also App. pp. 12–13.)

to violate [Chapter 9],” “not intend[ing] injury” to anyone, but in fact “believ[ing] its notices were accurate, lawful and contained no misrepresentations.” (App. p. 40.)

FFC responded to the Amended Complaint with a motion to dismiss,¹⁵ arguing, among other things, that Count 1 (the original claim about Pre-Sale Notice, which, notwithstanding the recent addition of the Post-Sale Notice claim in Count 2, is still by far the largest part of the case) is not amenable to class treatment.

FFC maintains this is so because, pursuant to § 36-9-628(e), “[a] secured party is not liable under Section 36-9-625(c)(2) [(which is, again, the sole basis of liability in Count 1)] more than once with respect to any one secured obligation.” As the Official Comments explain, this “ensures that a secured party will incur statutory damages only once in connection with any one secured obligation.” § 36-9-628 cmt. 4 (emphasis added).

As Mr. Delaney himself pointed out to FFC in objecting to one of its discovery requests, “a class action is a representative action brought by a named plaintiff or plaintiffs,” and the class is “a legally distinct entity.” (App. p. 17.) Mr. Delaney is the only named plaintiff here. He is the only one suing FFC, the only one who is actually before the court trying to establish FFC’s supposed liability for statutory damages under § 36-6-925(c)(2). Mr. Delaney is literally the only connection between FFC and the hundreds of absent alleged class members—none of whom have themselves sued FFC—Mr. Delaney (his lawyers, more specifically¹⁶) having taken it upon himself to try to establish FFC’s liability to them for statutory damages under § 36-9-625(c)(2) anyway. What Mr. Delaney is attempting to do here is what § 36-9-628(e) does not allow: to impose multiple liability against FFC under § 36-9-625(c)(2) in connection with one loan, his.

Chapter 9 is intended for far better things than what Mr. Delaney would like to do with it. The consumer protections it provides are intended to serve the ends of justice, not as a means of profiteering; nor could they in good conscience possibly be intended as some sort of doomsday device to annihilate the secured party who, like FFC here, neither meant, nor is even alleged to be liable for, any actual harm.

¹⁶ As noted in FFC’s memo on appealability, Mr. Delaney (who, again, admits that FFC meant no harm and believed in good faith that it complied with Chapter 9, and who in fact asserts no claim for any actual damages) does not look to our court system for protection but rather for profit; however, in fairness to Mr. Delaney, his lawyers’ economic ambitions would seem to far outpace his own. After all, in this game of litigation lottery, it is as if Mr. Delaney only has a scratch-off while his counsel are the ones who are really trying to hit the jackpot. By way of interrogatory response, Mr. Delaney is said to “know[] there is no guarantee that serving as the class representative will lead to any additional recovery or bonus, regardless of whether the class ultimately prevails.” (App. p. 33.) On the other hand, he is also said by his own counsel to be an “underprivileged South Carolina citizen.” (App. p. 68.) Given that he is “underprivileged,” and that what he wants to get out of this case is money, and that he has no reason to expect that serving as class representative will further that goal, it is not clear why he wanted to pursue his claims in the exponentially more complicated and time consuming form of a class action, as opposed to going ahead and trying to monetize his own individual claim (the size of which is within the jurisdictional limit of the magistrate’s court) via his own individual litigation against or settlement with FFC.

By its very nature, the form of liability that § 36-9-625(c)(2) creates (a form of liability that is not merely liability without fault but liability without damages) requires safeguards against injustice. Indeed, the very absurdity that Mr. Delaney seeks to accomplish in this case is at once a perfect example of the threat of such injustice and why § 36-9-628(e) guards against it. Even aside from the plain language addressed above (about § 36-9-628(e) ensuring that statutory damages liability is incurred no more than once in connection with any one secured obligation), to construe the statutory scheme otherwise, i.e., to construe it as blessing the sort of plainly ill-gotten gains sought to be obtained here, is untenable. See Ray Bell Constr. Co. v. School Dist. of Greenville Co., 331 S.C. 19, 26, 501 S.E.2d 725, 729 (1998) (courts do not accept statutory interpretations that, if accepted, would lead to absurd results).

All that said, the trial court disagreed with FFC's argument in this regard, denying its motion to dismiss in all respects¹⁷ and thereafter denying its motion to reconsider,¹⁸ prompting this immediate appeal, which this Court dismissed via the Order of Dismissal, which reads as follows:

Because the order on appeal is not immediately appealable, this appeal is dismissed. See S.C. Code Ann. § 14-3-330 (2017) (providing our appellate courts may review an interlocutory order that involves the merits of the case or affects a substantial right); McLendon v. S.C.

¹⁷ (App. pp. 298–312.)

¹⁸ (App. pp. 313–326.)

Dep't of Highways & Pub. Transp., 313 S.C. 525, 526, 443 S.E.2d 539, 540 (1994) (holding a motion to dismiss is not immediately appealable under section 14-3-330); id. at 526 n.2, 443 S.E.2d 539, 540 n.2 (“Like the denial of a motion for summary judgment, the denial of a motion to dismiss does not establish the law of the case and the issue raised by the motion can be raised again at a later stage of the proceedings.”); Ballenger v. Bowen, 313 S.C. 476, 476, 443 S.E.2d 379, 380 (1994) (holding denial of summary judgment motion was not immediately appealable despite language in the order appearing to strike a defense); Shields v. Martin Marietta Corp., 303 S.C. 469, 470, 402 S.E.2d 482, 483 (1991) (“Avoidance of trial is not a ‘substantial right’ entitling a party to immediate appeal of an interlocutory order.”). The remittitur will be sent as required by Rule 221 (b), SCACR.

This petition follows. Contrary to the conclusion expressed in the Order of Dismissal, FFC most respectfully submits that the Appealed Orders are indeed immediately appealable and that this appeal should be reinstated and/or reheard or otherwise reconsidered so that it is allowed to proceed in this Court and decided on the merits in due course.

ARGUMENT

I. The Order of Dismissal reflects that the Court overlooked or misapprehended the substance and effect of the Appealed Orders and the scope of its appellate jurisdiction, and FFC’s appellate rights, under § 14-3-330.

FFC, of course, concedes that the Appealed Orders are interlocutory, that “[t]he right of appeal arises from and is controlled by statutory law,” and that a party may appeal an interlocutory order only where the right to do so is granted by statute.

Ex parte Capital U-Drive-It, Inc., 369 S.C. 1, 6, 630 S.E.2d 464, 467 (2006); id. (“The determination of whether a party may immediately appeal an order issued before or during trial is governed primarily by . . . § 14-3-330 Absent a specialized statute, an order must fall into one of several categories set forth in Section 14-3-330 in order to be immediately appealable.”).

But contrary to the view reflected in the Order of Dismissal, the Appealed Orders do fall within the certain class of interlocutory or intermediate orders with respect to which § 14-3-330 provides this Court with appellate jurisdiction and FFC with the right to appeal. They are immediately appealable under § 14-3-330(1) as orders “involving the merits” and/or under § 14-3-330(2) as orders that deprive FFC of “a mode of trial to which it is entitled as a matter of right”¹⁹ and/or as orders that “strike[] out an answer or any part thereof.” See U-Drive-It, 369 S.C. at 7, 630 S.E.2d at 467 (addressing subsection (1)’s allowance of immediate appeals of orders involving the merits: “An order ‘involves the merits,’ as that term is used in Section 14-3-330(1) . . . and is immediately appealable when it finally determines some substantial matter forming the whole or part of some cause of action or defense.”) (emphasis added) (footnote omitted)); see also Morrow v. Fundamental Long-Term Care Holdings, LLC, 412 S.C. 534, 539, 773 S.E.2d 144, 146, (2015) (holding that, under the circumstances, a bifurcation order was immediately appealable because it “effectively grant[ed] the [defendants] potential summary judgment on [certain] issues”) (emphasis added); id., 773 S.E.2d at 147 n.2 (noting that the order sub judice “implicated a substantial right . . . [and] [j]ust because part of the prejudice stemming from the order may be cured at a later date does not remove it from the purview of section 14-3-330(2)(a)”) (emphasis in original.); see also Salmonsens v. CGD, Inc., 377 S.C. 442, 452–53, 661 S.E.2d 81, 87 (2008) (“[Pursuant to § 14-3-330(2), this Court has held on numerous occasions that when a trial courts order deprives a party of a mode of trial to which it is entitled to as a matter of right, such order is immediately appealable.”) (quoting Flagstar, 341 S.C. at 72, 533 S.E.2d at 333); see, e.g., Nauful v. Milligan, 258 S.C. 139, 143, 187 S.E.2d 511, 513 (1972) (“The interlocutory adjudication in this case determines that the defenses interposed by defendant are without merit and that he is liable to the plaintiff on the claim asserted in the complaint, leaving only the amount of the damages at issue. It thus finally decides the merits of every issue in the case, except that of damages. We think that such a determination involves the merits and comes within the class of interlocutory or intermediate orders from which an immediate appeal is allowed under [§ 14-3-330’s predecessor in the 1962 Code].”).

At bottom, the Order of Dismissal rests on the proposition that the denial of a motion to dismiss is not immediately appealable under § 14-3-330 because it “does not establish the law of the case and the issue raised by the motion can be raised again at a later stage of the proceedings.” (Order of Dismissal (quoting McLendon, 313 S.C. at 526, 443 S.E.2d at 540 n.2).) Most respectfully, the question of appealability here is just not that simple, and in dismissing this appeal, the Court overlooked or misapprehended a number of material points.

To begin with, the proposition that the denial of a motion to dismiss does not establish the law of the case proceeds from the premise that, like a motion for summary judgment that is denied because of the existence of a genuine issue of material fact, the denial is because of the existence of a factual dispute that must be adjudicated at a later stage of the litigation. See Ballenger, 313 S.C. at 477, 443 S.E.2d at 380 (stating that the denial of a motion for summary judgment “simply decides the case should proceed to trial”); McLendon, 313 S.C. 525, 526, 443 S.E.2d 539, 540 n.2 (explaining that the denial of a motion to dismiss is not immediately appealable for the same reasons given in Ballenger that the denial of a motion for summary judgment is not immediately appealable); cf. Evening Post Pub. Co. v. Berkeley County Sch. Dist., 392 S.C. 76, 708 S.E.2d 745 (2011) (“Summary judgment is not appropriate where further inquiry into the facts of the case is desirable to clarify the application of the law.”) (emphasis added); David v. McLeod Reg’l Med. Ctr., 367 S.C. 242, 247, 626 S.E.2d 1, 3 (2006) (“In determining whether any triable issues of fact exist, the court must view the evidence and all reasonable inferences that may be drawn from the evidence in the light most favorable to the non-moving party.”) (emphasis added).

But that is not what we have here in FFC’s § 36-9-628(e) defense to the class liability Mr. Delaney seeks to establish against it for statutory damages under § 36-9-625(c)(2). Rather, FFC’s § 36-9-628(e) defense is a pure, dispositive question of law that is wholly disconnected from any factual dispute and neither in need of nor even in any way capable of benefitting from any further factual inquiry or development.

FFC’s § 36-9-628(e) defense is just that: an affirmative defense, which it properly raised in a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b) because the allegations of the operative complaint itself demonstrate the existence of the defense. Spence v. Spence, 368 S.C. 106, 123–24, 628 S.E.2d 869, 878–79 (2006) (“[B]ecause the factual analysis of a Rule 12(b)(6) motion is confined to the four corners of the complaint, an affirmative defense usually must be pled in an answer and either resolved in later motions such as summary judgment or directed verdict or at trial. . . . [T]he general prohibition against pleading an affirmative defense in a motion to dismiss has been relaxed in modern practice. Most courts allow such defenses to be raised in a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b) when there is no disputed issue of fact raised by an affirmative defense, or the facts are completely disclosed on the face of the pleadings, and realistically nothing further can be developed by pretrial discovery or a trial on the issue raised by the defense This view is in keeping with the pleading and discovery system established by the Rules of Civil Procedure, which allow a party to raise Rule 12(b) defenses in a pre-answer motion. Owner 4 in this instance properly asserted the affirmative defense of bona fide purchaser for value in a Rule 12(b)(6) motion. The defense did not raise a disputed issue of fact and the relevant facts were completely disclosed in the complaint. Owner 2 has not shown that further facts could be developed by pretrial discovery or a trial on the defense of bona fide purchaser for value. The circuit court properly dismissed the complaint against Owner 4.”) (internal citations and quotation marks omitted).

Unlike where a motion for summary judgment or a motion to dismiss is denied because of the existence of a factual dispute that must be adjudicated at a later stage of the litigation, with respect to FFC’s § 36-9-628(e) defense, all facts in any way bearing on the defense are completely disclosed and confirmed on the face of the operative complaint such that, realistically, nothing further can be developed by pretrial discovery or a trial on the issue raised by the defense and the essential premise underlying the reasoning of the McLendon and Ballenger decisions (cited in the Order of Dismissal) simply does not exist.

The Court has also overlooked or misapprehended the point that, “[b]y it’s nature, the question of whether an order is immediately appealable is determined on a case-by-case basis,”²⁰ and the “review of trial court orders is not constrained by how the order is styled” but rather turns on the order’s effect. Id. at 539, 773 S.E.2d at 147 (citing Thornton v. S.C. Elec. & Gas Corp., 391 S.C. 297, 304, 705 S.E.2d 475, 479 (Ct. App. 2011) (“[A]n appellate court should look to the effect of an interlocutory order to determine its appealability.”)).

In pertinent part, the Principal Order reads as follows:

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

FFC asserts many grounds for dismissal in its Motion to Dismiss Amended Class Action Complaint. The Court finds none have merit.

4. The Amended Complaint does not seek multiple recoveries for any single UCC violation and class actions are permitted under the UCC.

FFC’s fourth argument asserts § 36-9-628(e) precludes Delaney from seeking to recover for the class. See Memorandum in Support at 22–23. The Court rejects FFC’s argument about Delaney seeking multiple recoveries per secured obligation.

The plain language of § 36-9-628(e) says, “[a] secured party is not liable under Section 36-9-625(c)(2) more than once with respect to any one secured obligation.” See § 36-9-628(e) (emphasis added)). Delaney and the Class only seek damages under § 36-9-625(c)(2) once per secured obligation—meaning co-debtors or co-obligors (i.e., consumers part of the same “secured obligation”) would split § 36-9-625(c)(2) damages awarded for their joint transaction. Delaney seeks damages on behalf of the class in connection with multiple secured obligations, one for each class member. FFC[’s] argument implies § 36-9-628(e) bars class actions requesting recovery under § 36-9-625(c)(2) altogether. But the plain language of the UCC does not prevent class actions or the damages sought by the Class. Presumably, the General Assembly would have made a non-uniform amendment to the Official Text of the UCC when it enacted § 36-9-625 if it intended to bar such class actions altogether, “especially when it has chosen to expressly bar class action litigation in other areas.” Grazia, 390 S.C. at 576 (collecting statutes); cf. § 810 ILCS 5/9-625 (Illinois’s adoption of UCC § 9-625(c)(2) and non-uniform amendment providing a consumer-debtor may recover the statutory minimum “in any individual action”) (emphasis added).

Section 36-9-628(e) was enacted to prevent secured parties from being liable to multiple debtors for § 36-9-625(c)(2) damages when they were part of the same transaction giving rise to the claim. Singleton, 358 S.C. at 377 (explaining § 36-9-628(e) “effectively overrules the Crane holding with respect to recovery of statutory minimum damages,” as “Crane stands for the proposition that multiple guarantors to one secured transaction are entitled to recover”).

(App. pp. 299, 306–07 (emphasis in original as stated therein).)

Thus, the trial court expressly sets forth “Conclusions of Law” and rules against FFC on the merits of its § 36-9-628(e) defense to the class liability Mr. Delaney seeks to establish against it for statutory damages under § 36-9-625(c)(2). Note how, unlike its treatment of other arguments (for instance those addressed in sections 5 and 6 of the order, both of which conclude with language reading, “Delaney’s Amended Complaint sufficiently states a cause of action for his and the class members' [presale notice/post-sale notice] claims”),²¹ the plain language of the trial court’s ruling on FFC’s § 36-9-628(e) defense is not to the effect that the defense is merely staved off for the time being but rather that it is gone for good. Indeed, while it was prompted by FFC’s motion to dismiss, the substance of the trial court’s ruling on § 36-9-628(e) reads as a judgment for Mr. Delaney on the issue.

The Court has also overlooked or misapprehended the point that the trial court’s unequivocal answer to the pure question of law posed by FFC’s § 36-9-628(e) defense²² places the issue beyond the reach of any other trial judge going forward, as “one circuit court judge may not overrule another.” Salmonsens v. CGD, Inc., 377 S.C. 442, 454, 661 S.E.2d 81, 88 (2008) (“Although Salmonsens is correct that one circuit court judge may not overrule another, we find this rule was not violated in the instant case.”).

Thus, on a substantial matter that, all by itself, is a defense to the vast majority of the liability Mr. Delaney seeks to impose against FFC, a matter presenting a pure question of law (statutory interpretation), a matter solely within the province of the court to decide, a matter that neither was nor ever will be affected by any question of fact, the trial court has said to FFC: you lose. Looking beyond how it is styled and to its substance and effect, the Principal Order (and in turn the Secondary Order) is immediately appealable under subsection (1) of § 14-3-330 as an order “involving the merits” and/or under subsection (2)(c) as an order “strik[ing] out an answer or any part thereof,” because the principal appealed order does not merely deny FFC’s motion to dismiss but rather dooms its § 36-9-628(e) defense entirely, effectively granting judgment to Mr. Delaney on the issue or otherwise scrubbing it from the trial court proceedings going forward.

²¹ (App. pp. 309, 311 (emphasis added).)

²² Catawba Indian Tribe of S.C. v. State, 372 S.C. 519, 642 S.E.2d 751 (2007) (“The issue of interpretation of a statute is a question of law for the court.”)

The Court has also overlooked or misapprehended the point that if FFC’s § 36-9-628(e) defense is meritorious, it means that FFC has a right not to face a class action with respect to alleged § 36-9-625(c)(2) liability. By forcing FFC to do so anyway, the Appealed Orders have denied FFC of a mode of trial to which it is entitled to as a matter of right, and are therefore immediately appealable under § 14-3-330(2).

In the Order of Dismissal, the Court cites Shields, 303 S.C. at 470, 402 S.E.2d at 483 for the proposition that “[a]voidance of trial is not a ‘substantial right’ entitling a party to immediate appeal of an interlocutory order.” But this proposition has not relevant here. Shields was an appeal from an order restoring cases to the active docket. Shields had nothing to do with any issue regarding the mode of trial. FFC’s § 36-9-628(e) defense does not aim to avoid trial with Mr. Delaney with respect to its alleged § 36-9-625(c)(2) liability to him but rather to enforce FFC’s statutory right to a trial with Mr. Delaney that does not include his prosecution of claims for its alleged § 36-9-625(c)(2) liability to others (themselves absent from and avoiding direct litigation with FFC) in a representative capacity.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, FFC asks the Court to grant the instant petition, vacate the Order of Dismissal, and reinstate and/or rehear or otherwise reconsider this appeal so that it proceeds in this Court to be decided on the merits in due course.
