THE STATE,

RESPONDENT,

V.

MATTHEW S. YOUNG,

APPELLANT

APPELLATE CASE NO. 2022-000218

Appeal from Richland County

Honorable Robert E. Hood, Circuit Court Judge

Opinion No. 2025-UP-248

PETITION FOR REHEARING

Pursuant to Rules 221 and 240, SCACR, counsel for appellant would petition for rehearing regarding this Court’s holding that appellant was neither “in custody” nor being “interrogated” at the crime scene per the rationale that the police communications were merely investigatory because to the contrary, this Court might have overlooked the actual commands issued by the officers (such as “stay right there” and “standby” and “hold on),” and the pointed questions asked (such as “[are] you the one who stabbed” and [whether] the stab[bing was] due to an altercation”), as the same proved that appellant was “in custody” and being “interrogated” at that time. In support of this petition, counsel would submit the following facts.

Appellant was sentenced to life without parole after being convicted of voluntary manslaughter and possession of a weapon during the commission of a violent crime. Prior to trial, defense counsel moved to suppress appellant's statements to law enforcement. During the hearing on the motion, Steven K. Sulser with the Columbia Police Department testified regarding his interactions with appellant. R. 4, ll. 5-7. Sulser arrived at the scene to find an individual lying on the ground next to a car. R. 5, ll. 16-119. Sulser saw appellant approaching him from a lawn maintenance truck. R. 5, ll. 20-22. Sulser asked appellant "Where's the suspect? Did you see who did it?" R. 5, ll. 22-23. Appellant responded that he did not. R. 5, l. 24. Sulser then directed appellant to step back so he could establish a crime scene. R. 5, ll. 24-25.

Sulser directed another police officer, Vereen, to go find appellant and his coworkers. R. 20, ll. 16-23. Vereen parked the police car perpendicular to the work truck. R. 22, ll. 7-12. Vereen asked appellant and his coworkers for their identification. R. 40, ll. 17-18. Vereen said he needed the men to "stay right [t]here for a few minutes" because someone wanted to talk to them. R. 40, ll. 19-22 (emphasis added); R. 44, ll. 8-14. Appellant explained that he did not feel like he was free to leave at this point because he had been asked – by law enforcement – to stay. R. 40, ll. 23-25.

Shortly thereafter, Sulser and Officer Osagie walked down to a spot a little farther down in the neighborhood where he found Vereen standing guard over appellant and his two coworkers. R. 6, ll. 12-25; R. 23, ll. 8-11. Sulser asked the trio if they knew or saw who stabbed the individual on the ground, and appellant responded that he had no idea. R. 7, ll. 7-11. Specifically, Sulser asked appellant if he had called 911 and stated that he stabbed a man who had approached him in an aggressive manner. R. 8, ll. 1-3; R. 23, ll. 12-22; R. 41, ll. 15-17. Sulser was clear – he was speaking directly to appellant "in an attempt to establish if he's the one who did the stabbing." R. 23, ll. 20-22. Sulser had received information that appellant was the one who stabbed the deceased.

R. 25, ll. 16-20. Appellant was a suspect. R. 25, ll. 21-23; R. 26, ll. 2-3. Appellant did not feel free to leave. R. 41, ll. 22-24.

Appellant responded to Sulser that it was not him. R. 8, ll. 4-6. Importantly, Sulser told Appellant “just stand by real quick” so he could gather more information from dispatch. R. 8, ll. 6-8 (emphasis added); State’s Exhibit #50 (showing Sulser tell appellant to “hold on one second.”). After getting additional information that showed appellant had not called 911 – his coworker had – Sulser approached appellant again. R. 8, ll. 9-18. Sulser then advised appellant that if he were lying, “this could be a serious incident,” but that “if he stabbed him due to an altercation ... come forward with that information.” R. 8, ll. 18-22; State’s Exhibit #50. Then, appellant said he stabbed the deceased. R. 8, ll. 22-23; State’s Exhibit #50. Sulser immediately placed appellant in handcuffs and began walking appellant toward his patrol car. R. 9, ll. 1-4; R. 42, ll. 2-9; State’s Exhibit #50.

While walking appellant to his car, Sulser commented, “[I]f you stabbed him and it was self-defense, it is what it is.” R. 9, ll. 5-10; State’s Exhibit #50. According to Sulser, appellant responded, “I did it. It wasn’t self-defense and ... I did it.” R. 9, ll. 12-15; State’s Exhibit #50. Only then did Sulser advise appellant of his rights. R. 9, l. 21 – R. 10, l. 2; R. 42, ll. 10-13; State’s Exhibit #50. After the advisement, Sulser continued to engage appellant in conversation by asking about the location of the knife. R. 10, l. 15 – R. 11, l. 1; State’s Exhibit #50. Appellant explained that he continued speaking with Sulser even after being advised of his rights because he had “already told him any - - what was going on anyway.” R. 42, ll. 20-25.

Sulser’s body worn camera was activated during his entire interaction with appellant. R. 6, ll. 1-7; State’s Exhibit #2; State’s Exhibit #50.<sup>1</sup> Sulser also remained present while Christian Ross, the investigator on the case, interrogated appellant at the scene so that his camera caught the interactions between appellant and Ross as well. R. 13, ll. 5-17; R. 30, ll. 4-8. Ross first spoke to appellant when appellant was handcuffed and seated in Sulser's patrol car. R. 30, ll. 4-6. Appellant was "already detained and in custody" prior to Ross's arrival. R. 30, ll. 9-10. Thereafter, Sulser took appellant to police headquarters where appellant was interrogated by Ross again. R. 17, ll. 17-22.

Defense counsel argued appellant was in custody at the scene from the very beginning because he had been told by Vereen and Sulser not to leave. R. 52, ll. 15-22. Further, Sulser considered appellant a suspect at the time based upon the information he had from dispatch. R. 52, ll. 20-25.

The trial judge noted that Sulser was "trying to figure out what happened and who needs to be done what with in really quick fashion." R. 70, ll. 10-13. Next the judge erroneously stated that no one was under formal detention despite evidence to the contrary. R. 71, ll. 23-24. He also erroneously determined that "[i]n custody is the totality of the circumstances that not only includes the person's freedom to leave the scene, but the purpose and the place and the length of the questioning must also be considered." R. 71, l. 24 – R. 72, l. 2. However, he rightly noted that "the fact that Sulser may have thought [Appellant] did it is not dispositive," "the fact that [appellant] thought he may have not been free to leave is not dispositive" and that it was "an objective standard based upon a reasonable person standard." R. 72, ll. 2-25.<sup>2</sup> determine what was admissible. The judge allowed State's Exhibits #50, #51, and #63 to be admitted.

<sup>2</sup> Defense counsel renewed his objections contemporaneously with the introduction of appellant's statements during the trial. R. 104, ll. 13-23; R. 137, ll. 4-13; R. 254, ll. 7-22.

On appeal the following two issues were raised:

The trial judge erred when he determined appellant was not in custody where the totality of the circumstances showed a reasonable person would have not felt free to leave when (1) two armed police officers told appellant not to leave, (2) multiple armed police officers were around appellant, (3) the armed police officers expressed their subjective intent that appellant was not free to leave and would have been prohibited from doing so, (4) a police car was parked perpendicular to appellant's work truck, and (5) appellant expressed his subjective believe that he was not free to leave.

The trial court erred by allowing the state to introduce multiple statements made by appellant during custodial interrogation where appellant's statements were tainted by the police obtaining incriminating statements from appellant prior to advising him of his rights pursuant to Miranda in contravention of federal and state law.

This Court issued the following holding in the case:

Young was questioned in public, unrestrained, in front of his work truck and flanked by co-workers. Although an officer had instructed Young and his co-workers to remain in the area so that police could speak to them, nearly every civilian in the neighborhood had their freedom of movement restricted either by the crime scene tape or by interactions with first responders. While Sulser testified that Young wouldn't have been free to leave the scene at the time Sulser approached him, the trial court correctly determined that this is irrelevant to determining whether Young was in custody. The standard is an objective, reasonable person standard, and the subjective belief of the officer is not a consideration. See Berkemer v. McCarty, 468 U.S. 420, 442 (1984).

After a careful review of the body camera footage, we find the trial court correctly characterized Sulser as a first responder trying to quickly figure out what happened rather than an investigator utilizing trained interrogation tactics. As the Supreme Court stated in Miranda, "[g]eneral on-the-scene questioning as to facts surrounding a crime or other general questioning of citizens in the fact-finding process" is distinct from the coercive settings outlined in Miranda, as "[i]n such situations the compelling atmosphere inherent in the process of in-custody interrogation is not necessarily present." 384 U.S. at 477-78. See also State v. Easler, 327 S.C. 121, 128-29, 489 S.E.2d 617, 621 (1997), overruled on other grounds by State v. Greene, 423 S.C. 263, 814 S.E.2d 496 (2018) (holding police questioning of suspect who left the scene of a deadly car accident was not custodial interrogation); State v. Morgan, 282 S.C. 409, 411-12, 319 S.E.2d 335, 336-37 (1984) (holding a routine investigation into the cause of a traffic accident that had recently occurred did not rise to the level of custodial interrogation); Barksdale, 433 S.C. at 335-36, 857 S.E.2d at 563 (holding defendant was not in custody when detained by police and questioned on the roadside following a traffic accident); State v. Kerr, 330 S.C. 132, 146, 498 S.E.2d 212, 219 (Ct. App. 1998) (holding policeman conducting a routine investigation of a traffic accident on the roadside had not placed defendant in custody).

The record supports the trial court's ruling that Young was not in custody at the time he admitted to stabbing the victim, and therefore was not subject to custodial interrogation. We consequently find the trial court properly admitted the body camera footage.

Young further argues that the trial court improperly admitted the statements he made to police post-Miranda, as those statements were tainted by the prior unwarned statements. We disagree. Because we find that Young was not in custody at the time he made pre-Miranda admissions to law enforcement, we also find that Young's post-Miranda statements were not tainted by the prior questioning.

Clearly, the commands made by Officers Vereen and Sulser, and Officer Sulser's questions went far beyond any fact-finding or investigatory procedure in the case. Without a doubt, appellant was in custody when the first officer (Officer Vereen) told him to "stay right [t]here for a few minutes" because someone wanted to talk to them. Officer Vereen stood guard over appellant while the second officer (Officer Sulser) was en route. Then, when Officer Sulser arrived, appellant was told to "stand by" and "stay put." Further, the patrol car was parked perpendicular to the lawn maintenance truck effectively blocking appellant from leaving by way of the truck. When Officer Sulser arrived, he inquired of the appellant as to who stabbed, and stated that this was a serious incident. Any reasonable person would have believed that he or she was not free to leave, and thus in custody, based on the officers' commands that prohibited appellant from exiting the neighborhood. Furthermore, the nature of the questioning undoubtedly revealed that appellant was in custody. Officer Sulser asked appellant directly and point blank about whether he stabbed the deceased and if the stabbing was due to an altercation.

In Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 444 (1966), the United States Supreme Court held "the prosecution may not use statements, whether exculpatory or inculpatory, stemming from custodial interrogation of the defendant unless it demonstrates the use of procedural safeguards effective to secure the privilege against self-incrimination." The Court explained that "custodial interrogation” meant “questioning initiated by law enforcement officers after a person has been taken into custody or otherwise deprived of his freedom of action in any significant way.” Id.

Thereafter, the Court required that

[p]rior to any questioning, the person must be warned that he has a right to remain silent, that any statement he does make may be used as evidence against him, and that he has a right to the presence of an attorney, either retained or appointed. The defendant may waive effectuation of these rights, provided the waiver is made voluntarily, knowingly and intelligently.

Id. This is because “in-custody interrogation[s]” place “inherently compelling pressures” on the persons interrogated. Id. at 467. The Supreme Court described the purposes of the Miranda safeguards: “to ensure that the police do not coerce or trick captive suspects into confessing, to relieve the ‘inherently compelling pressures’ generated by the custodial setting itself, ‘which work to undermine the individual’s will to resist, and as much as possible to free courts from the task of scrutinizing individual cases to try to determine, after the fact, whether particular confessions were voluntary.” Berkemer v. McCarty, 468 U.S. 420, 434 (1984)

The Supreme Court concluded “the Miranda safeguards come into play whenever a person in custody is subjected to either express questioning or its functional equivalent.” Rhode Island v. Innis, 446 U.S. 291, 300-301 (1980). According to the Court, “[t]he latter portion of this definition focuses primarily upon the perceptions of the suspect, rather than the intent of the police.” Id. at 301. “[T]he definition of interrogation can extend only to words or actions on the part of police officers that they should have known were reasonably likely to elicit an incriminating response.” Id. at 302 (emphasis in original). Whether a suspect was in “custody is determined by an objective analysis of ‘whether a reasonable man in the suspect’s position would have understood himself to be in custody.’” State v. Ledford, 351 S.C. 83, 88, 567 S.E.2d 904, 907 (Ct. App. 2002). A person is “in custody” when a person’s freedom has been restricted.

State v. Caulder, 287 S.C. 507, 515, 339 S.E.2d 876, 881 (Ct. App. 1986); see also State v. Neely, 271 S.C. 33, 40, 244 S.E.2d 522, 526 (1978).

The determination of whether a person is “in custody” for Miranda purposes requires “[t]wo discrete inquiries”: “first, what were the circumstances surrounding the interrogation; and second, given those circumstances, would a reasonable person have felt he or she was not at liberty to terminate the interrogation and leave.” Thompson v. Keohane, 516 U.S. 99, 112 (1995). “In determining whether an individual was in custody, a court must examine all of the circumstances surrounding the interrogation, but the ultimate inquiry is simply whether there [was] a formal arrest or restraint on freedom of movement of the degree associated with a formal arrest.” Stansbury v. California, 511 U.S. 318, 322 (1994) (internal quotations omitted); see also Maryland v. Shatzer, 559 U.S. 98, 112 (2010).

“To determine whether a suspect is in custody, the trial court must examine the totality of the circumstances, which include factors such as the place, purpose, and length of interrogation, as well as whether the suspect was free to leave the place of questioning.” State v. Evans, 354 S.C. 579, 583, 582 S.E.2d 407, 410 (2003); see also State v. Williams, 405 S.C. 263, 273, 747 S.E.2d 194, 199 (Ct. App. 2013). “The custodial determination is an objective analysis based on whether a reasonable person would have concluded that he was in police custody.” Evans, 354 S.C. at 583, 582 S.E.2d at 410.

Although the case concerned a traffic stop, it provides some guidance here, particularly in light of the state’s concession that the police were detaining Appellant at a minimum. Berkemer v. McCarty, 468 U.S. 420 (1984). Berkemer began with a traffic stop. Berkemer, 468 U.S. at 422-23. A police officer saw the defendant’s car weaving, followed him for two miles, stopped him, and directed the defendant to get out of his car. Id. at 423. The defendant was obviously intoxicated. Id. In response to the officer's questioning, the defendant said he drank two beers and smoked marijuana. Id. The officer arrested the defendant and he made further incriminating statements at the jail. Id. at 423-24. At no point did the police give him Miranda warnings. Id. at 424. The Court first rejected the argument that Miranda should not apply to misdemeanor arrests. Id. at 429-34. After rejecting this argument, the Court concluded that the defendant's post-arrest statements at the jail were inadmissible. Id. at 434-35.

Our Supreme Court recognized Berkemer's important distinction between routine traffic stops and accidents in State v. Easler, 327 S.C. 121, 489 S.E.2d 617 (1997). After noting that routine traffic stops do not constitute custodial interrogation, the Court wrote that the situation in Easler was different because "the officers, having been advised there had been an accident and that someone had left the scene, went looking for that individual based upon a description given by two eyewitnesses." Id. at 127, 489 S.E.2d at 620-21. The Court found that the officers interrogated Easler, but ultimately upheld the trial judge's ruling that Easler was not in custody. Id. See also State v. Medley, 417 S.C. 18, 787 S.E.2d 847 (Ct. App. 2016) (holding that the circuit judge erred in finding a defendant was not in custody and that officers should have known that questions about drinking were likely to elicit an incriminating response); State v. Coyle, 567 A.2d 870, 874-75 (Del. 1989) (describing custodial encounter at an accident scene as in "that twilight zone" left by Berkemer's decision not to adopt a bright-line rule).

In another case from our Supreme Court, Evans, the defendant went to the police station accompanied by her family. Evans, 354 S.C. at 581, 582 S.E.2d at 408. Two police officers took the defendant "into a back office to take her statement." The officers never advised the defendant of her Miranda rights. Id. at 581, 582 S.E.2d at 409. The police knew that the deadly fire they were investigating started with an accelerant. Id. at 581 n.2, 582 S.E.2d at 408 n. 2. The police told the defendant they did not believe her explanations for the fire. Id. at 581, 582 S.E.2d at 409. The two policemen left the room and sent in a female SLED agent, who used a sympathy tactic. Id. The two women were in the room for at least forty-five minutes. Id. at 582, 582 S.E.2d at 409. The SLED agent followed the defendant to the bathroom and waited outside the door. Id.

The Evans Court found that the defendant was in custody even though she was not formally arrested until shortly after making the statement. Id. at 584, 582 S.E.2d at 410. When analyzing whether the defendant was free to leave, the Court emphasized that the SLED agent accompanied her to the restroom and waited outside the door. Id. The Court was also persuaded that the defendant was “in custody” because she was interviewed in a back office in the police station, her cousin was not allowed to go into the interview room, and the interview lasted three hours. Finally, the officers’ purpose of the interview changed from a routine inquiry to questioning of a suspect when the female officer entered the interrogation room. Id.

Here, the officers’ commands and inquiries established that appellant believed, as any reasonable person would have believed, that there was no freedom to leave the scene, and that the officers’ questions asked were designed to elicit incriminating responses. The circumstances in this case proved that there was custodial interrogation of appellant at the crime scene. Additionally, appellant’s statements given subsequently at the police station were inadmissible as tainted due to the initial custodial interrogation violation in the case.

CONCLUSION

Based on the foregoing argument, counsel for appellant would request that this Court grant the petition for rehearing in the case.

Respectfully Submitted,
