Mary Caitlin,

The denial of a motion to verify or correct a verifiably fraudulent transcript can constitute a severe due process violation. Under both the U.S. Constitution and South Carolina law, due process requires a meaningful opportunity to be heard. If the official record used by an appellate court is intentionally falsified, your legal arguments are effectively silenced. I am researching what I need do, as I am at a loss. The fact this has happened, in a case so small in monetary repercussions truly bothers me. What bothers me most is the blatant attempts made to pass off a fraudulent transcript! I know this is wrong; it is wrong on so many fronts. Court Integrity, treatment of a Pro se litigant, and the fact I never dreamed this would occur. And when Jasimine Smith (I believe that's her name) told me they were denied, and that things I wrote did not happen, bothers me even worse. I trust that you will pass my concerns on to the proper people. I cannot believe such could happen sans everyone's dismay. I remain,

Yours truly,

Victoria Joy Stevens
