DEAR MR. SHEAROUSE

RECEIVED

JUN 16 2014

S.C. SUPREME COURT

I am writing to find out the status on my case. The lower court judge agreed that it is okay for lawyers to contradict themselves and admit to being ineffective. Lawyers do not have to be a good witness to their own self even when reading from notes. Lawyers can state for the record to having bad notes and a bad memory and also gets to guess one thing, think about another and do not have to answer a question. I am in the higher court now and want to know can someone from the Clerk of Court office look at their notes without guessing it might be Mr. William Blitch Jr or thinking it might be Miss Megan Harrigan or talking about some unknown secretary and please let me know who is actually assigned to the case for the respondent. Do the state have a time limit to file a return. Did the state decided not to file a return and I am just waiting for consideration by the court. How long do I have to wait to see how a trial lawyer got anybody even worse a judge to believe she specifically written any thing down after saying she is not good with her notes. My appellate case no# 2012 213198. Hopefully unlike in the lower court a clerk literally wrote this down

Sincerely
Cedric Kearse
