Jenny,

Blake just called me about this. We consent to his request for a continuance, but I would please ask that the oral arguments not be re-scheduled until December. I have two attorneys out on maternity leave, and I am covering their case load too which means my November is crazy.

Thanks,
Marian Scalise

Dear Jenny:

I am sending you an e-mail copy of the attached letter only because of the time-sensitive nature of its contents. The original is headed to you via hand-delivery.

This case is scheduled for argument next week, but the lawyer for the appellant was recently placed on interim suspension. John and I were contacted by the appellant on Friday and we agreed yesterday to handle the argument. While on one hand we wish we felt like we could go forward next week, we are requesting that the argument be postponed so that we can have some time to learn the file.

I believe that I have copied all opposing counsel on this communication. Thank you for your time in reading this message, and I apologize for the unusual step of e-mailing you with case-related correspondence.

My best,

-Blake
