

Aug 12, 2014

I'm respectfully requesting to you concerning the following:

Now after giving full consideration to what you said about the broad discretion of the prosecution, I have did some extensive research and I have yet to see a case under South Carolina Law where the prosecution did not proceeded upon... All defendants and co-defendants who were indicted by the grand jury under the Hands of one Hands of All Theory and from the research I have did on Hands of one Hands of all Theory the law states that regardless to each individual level of participation all is equally guilty so my question to you... Can you send me a case where under the Hands of one, Hands of All Theory where a co-defendant indicted upon a true Billed indictment was not tried at the same time, since you told me that situation is based upon prosecutorial discretion, so you should know a case to support such a contention.

Now I do understand that the prosecution has some discretion in choosing whom to charge however that's before the presentment of a grand jury indictment which is a charging document.

Now in addressing the facts Delrico M<sup>c</sup>Dow was not indicted as a co-defendant so my question is how could Delrico M<sup>c</sup>Dow (DNA) evidence be admitted at my trial, In an attempt to place me at crime scene that is not prosecutorial discretion but prosecutorial misconduct I'm baffled how the prosecution admitted Delrico M<sup>c</sup>Dow DNA evidence at my trial.

That's one of the reasons I want you to brief the directed verdict issue because the evidence is not sufficient to support a murder conviction the evidence is merely circumstantial and there's a link missing.

Respectfully Submitted

Devalle Clinton

CC: Susan B. Hackett

South Carolina Court of Appeals

United States Supreme Court

RECEIVED

AUG 15 2014

SC Court of Appeals

LEGAL MAIL

Devatee Clinton # 317521

MccI

386 Redemption Way

Mc Cormick, S.C

29899

RECEIVED

South Carolina Court of Appeals AUG 15 2014

Jenny Abbott Kitching
SC Court of Appeals

P.O. Box 11629

Columbia, S.C

29211