Subject: RE: Alexander N. Gee v. Ernest Yarborough (Appellate Case Number 2017-001394)

No judgment for ejection has been entered in this case (to my knowledge). The appealed Order does not order the ejection of the tenant.

The lease in question has been terminated by the landlords; and before termination, it was a month-to-month lease for years. Is it the position of the Court (without a hearing) that the lease is rewritten to extend the term during the appeal?

It is interesting that the Residential Landlord and Tenant Act is quoted when the Appellant's position was that this Act is inapplicable.
