Re: Sullivan v. Brown, et al., 2016-002337

S.C. SUPREME COURT

Dear Ladies:

I recently applied for inactive status. At the time it appeared that I would have all my attorney work done by the end of the year. At the remand hearing for Sullivan v. Brown, 2016-002337, yesterday the judge raised the possibility that post-hearing work would be necessary and that this would extend beyond the new year.

My question to the Court is whether I can finish up any post-trial letters or briefs even though they extend into January after my inactive status begins. I am not asking for a general extension; I just need to finish this case. It would be financially burdensome to my clients to bring in a new attorney at this point, and there is a likelihood of substantial delay while any new attorney became acquainted with this complicated case.

Thank you for finding out the answer for me.

Sincerely,

John R. Ferguson
