1 from the generally recognized practices and
2 procedures, if any, one of the proximate causes,
3 the direct cause of the plaintiff's alleged injury
4 and damages.

5           Now, if you find that to be the case, then 6 the plaintiff goes on and has to prove to you by 7 the greater weight or the preponderance of the 8 evidence, the standard they have on everything,
9 actual damages. Now, what are actual damages?
10 Actual damages are properly called compensatory
11 damages, meaning to compensate, to make the injured 12 party whole, to put them in the same position they 13 were in prior to the damage being received insofar
14 as it is possible with monetary amount.

15           Now, actual damages don't have to be proved 16 to you to a mathematical certainty but they have to 17 be reasonably and necessarily incurred and they 18 must be as a direct and proximate result of the 19 defendant's negligence. Actual or compensatory 20 damages include compensation for all of the 21 injuries which are naturally the result of the 22 alleged wrongful conduct if you found wrongful
23 conduct. They include, and I'm giving you
24 categories, I'm not saying that they exist in this 25 case, that's your job and responsibility to decide
