STATEMENT OF ISSUE ON APPEAL

Whether the court erred by revoking eight years of appellant's probation without specifying, on the record, the grounds for the revocation?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Appellant was sentenced by the Honorable Ryan Gibbons on April 26, 2016, to ten years imprisonment, suspended upon the service of two years imprisonment, and three years of probation for burglary in the second degree and assault and battery in the first degree. Appellant was also ordered to pay various surcharges. R. 3, ll. 1-11.

A probation revocation hearing was held on July 17, 2017, before the Honorable Daniel D. Hall. Ryan Payne represented appellant. The probation agent was Lynn Oliver. R. 1.

At the conclusion of the probation revocation hearing, Judge Hall revoked eight years of appellant's probation, terminated the balance, and converted the monetary debts to a civil judgement. R. 10, ll. 1-6.

This appeal follows.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

The appellate court's authority to review a decision revoking probation is confined to correcting errors of law unless the lack of a legal or evidentiary basis indicates the circuit judge's decision was arbitrary and capricious. See State v. Hamilton, 333 S.C. 642, 647, 511 S.E.2d 94, 96 (Ct.App.1999).

ARGUMENT

The court erred by revoking eight years of appellant's probation without specifying, on the record, the grounds for the revocation.

Relevant Facts

The probation agent alleged appellant had not reported on all occasions, and that he had not reported any employment to his agent. In addition, appellant had not notified his agent of his change of address, he had failed to follow the instructions of his agent, and he was behind on "multiple arrearages on the record which would be charged on the violations charge." R. 3, l. 11 – 4, l. 7. In addition, the agent alleged appellant had been convicted of a violent felony, and he had been arrested for being in possession of a weapon by a person convicted of a violent crime. R. 4, ll. 3-12.

Defense counsel Payne told the judge that a substantial part of the alleged probation violations were currently pending charges. Defense counsel urged the court to allow the judicial process to follow its natural path, and not to revoke appellant based on these charges. R. 5, l. 22 – 7, l. 18.

The judge then inquired of appellant how many times he had been to jail. Without stating what grounds for the revocation of probation he found credible, the judge summarily revoked eight years of appellant's probation. R. 7, l. 22 – 10, l. 6.

Discussion

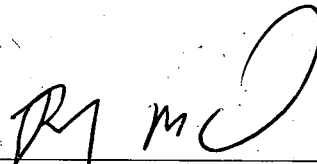

If the judge revoked appellant's probation in full, or in part, for failing to pay the public defender fund or other monetary items, he must first find that appellant's failure to pay was willful. See State v. Spare, 374 S.C. 264, 647 S.E.2d 706 (2007). Further, the court must determine whether the state had presented sufficient evidence to establish that a probationer has violated the terms of his probation. State v. Allen, 270 S.C. 88, 94, 634 S.E.2d 653, 655 (2006). While probation is a matter of grace, the probationer is entitled to fair treatment, and he must not be made the victim of whim or caprice. State v. Hamilton, 333 S.C. 642, 511 S.E.2d 94 (Ct. App. 1999); State v. White, 218 S.C. 130, 136, 61 S.E.2d 754, 756 (1950).

Because the judge did not make a finding that appellant not paying his monetary obligations was a willful violation, and because he failed to specify specifically that he found the state had proved appellant violated a specific term of his probation, the revocation in this case should be vacated. See Bearden v. Georgia, 461 U.S. 660 (1983); Barlet v. State, 288 S.C. 481, 483, 343 S.E.2d 620, 622 (1986); State v. Hamilton, supra.

CONCLUSION

By reason of the foregoing arguments, the revocation of appellant's probation should be vacated.
