Grant:

I have reviewed your report of June 4, 2015 on "State vs Sydney Moorer and Tammy Moorer."

The report is very thorough and written in a manner that explains your methodology, the foundations for headlight spread pattern comparison as a part of vehicle comparison, and the justification for your conclusion. The concept of any forensic comparison - from natural objects such as fingerprints and footprints to manmade objects from bullets, tires and tool marks are all based on these same criteria.

I agree with your methodology and find your illustrations show the similarities and differences from different vehicles quite well. It does appear that some of the frames show quite a bit of resolution for this type of comparison. The premise of the uniqueness of headlight spread patterns is well stated and illustrated.

Best,

George
