S.C. SUPREME COURT

RE: Gavin V. Jones #259726 V. State of S.C.
Appeal issue changed by Court, made Issue Criminal / Instead of Civil.

Clerk Howard,

I have been trying to figure out the best way to say this. The Court of Appeals changed my issue on Appeal. A Mandamus is not for attacking your conviction. I am guaranteed to lose on Appeal if my issues stay in its current form.

The way that the Court of Appeal addressed my issues, is by making them one question, this allowed the Court to circumvent South Carolina code of law 14-9-210 which is clearly the law the Solicitor and Lower Court admitted they did not follow.

Then you send me my filing fee back saying there is NO filing fee for criminal Appeals. And that was strange, since the Court of Appeals gave me 10 days to pay $100.00 filing fee. When asked why, I was told because it was civil, non-criminal. Here is the difference.

My Mandamus issues are compelling the Solicitor to use a Lawful Indictment, because the Indictment which was used is unlawful.

The Court of Appeals says I am trying to compel the State to release me. Clearly you see what is going on. Am I to look the other way and let my petition be dismissed because the way the Court has written up my issues?

(1) How can my issue be civil in the Court of Appeals?

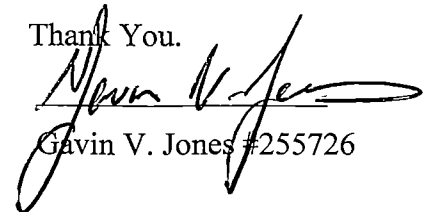

(2) And Criminal on Appeal to the Supreme Court?

My issue should be addressed by the Court as written. There was No objection to the issues presented in my final brief. There is nothing said about my issues Not being preserved for review are procedurally barred in the order of the Court of Appeals. Why am I telling you this, you are the gate keeper.

No one can say they didn't know about S.C. sham legal process with indictments and the trouble they are going through to keep it covered up. Aggravated Kidnapping.

So please tell me how can they change my issues into an issue that does not fit the purpose of a Mandamus?

Thank You.
