STATEMENT OF ISSUES ON CERTIORARI

I.

Whether the trial judge properly admitted the drug evidence found inside Petitioner's home when law enforcement lawfully entered the home under the exigent circumstances of locating and assisting a victim of an ongoing domestic violence attack or locating a suspect of domestic violence?

II.

Whether the issue of evidence found pursuant to a search warrant executed on Petitioner's home was properly preserved for appeal when Petitioner did not challenge the validity of the search warrant at trial? And if the issue was preserved for appeal, whether the evidence seized from Petitioner's bathroom was properly admitted against him pursuant to the plain view exception to the warrant requirement when its incriminating nature was immediately apparent to law enforcement? And if the trial judge erred in admitting the evidence found in Petitioner's bathroom, whether any error was harmless when the majority of the drugs introduced against Petitioner at trial were obtained as the result of a properly executed search warrant?

III.

Whether the trial judge properly admitted the drug evidence found inside Petitioner's home when the evidence was found pursuant to a validly executed search warrant and not pursuant to a violation of S.C. Code § 16-25-70(H)(1)(a) because law enforcement was pursuing a suspect of domestic violence?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Procedural History

In April 2011, the Charleston County Grand Jury indicted Petitioner for one count of trafficking cocaine in excess of 400 grams (2011-GS-10-2320), and one count of possession of a firearm during the commission of a violent crime (2011-GS-10-2321). Petitioner originally stood trial on these indictments before the Honorable Stephanie McDonald on November 13-15, 2012. Petitioner was convicted of both the aforementioned crimes and an additional count of possession of a firearm by a person convicted of a violent crime. Petitioner was sentenced to thirty years' imprisonment on the trafficking charge and an additional five years' imprisonment for one of the weapons charges that was to be served consecutively for an aggregate total of thirty-five years' imprisonment.

Petitioner appealed his convictions. The Court of Appeals found the issue that Petitioner raised on appeal had not been properly preserved and affirmed Petitioner's convictions. State v. Richardson, Op. No. 2014-UP-471 (S.C. Ct. App. 2014). Petitioner filed an application for post-conviction relief on January 15, 2015. Petitioner's post-conviction relief action was granted by the Honorable John C. Hayes on August 15, 2016. The State filed a petition for a writ of certiorari which was denied by the Supreme Court on May 24, 2018.

On January 10, 2019, the Honorable Roger M. Young heard Petitioner's pre-trial motions to suppress the drug evidence found inside his home. Judge Young indicated that Judge Dennis agreed to bind himself to any decision made by Judge Young. (R. 192). Judge Young denied Petitioner's motions via email on January 11, 2019. (R. 570). On January 14-16, 2019, Petitioner proceeded to a retrial in the Charleston County Court of General Sessions with the Honorable R. Markley Dennis, presiding. Prior to Petitioner's retrial, he was indicted by the Charleston County

Grand Jury for one count of possession of a firearm by a person convicted of a violent crime (2019-GS-10-879). Petitioner stood trial for this indictment as well as trafficking in cocaine in excess of 400 grams (2011-GS-10-2320), and one count of possession of a firearm during the commission of a violent crime (2011-GS-10-2321). Petitioner was represented by Rodney D. Davis, Esquire, and Daniel Summa, Esquire of the Ninth Circuit Public Defender's Office. The State was represented by Assistant Solicitors Whit Sowards and Lauren Frierson of the Ninth Circuit Solicitor's Office. At the conclusion of trial, the jury convicted Petitioner of trafficking in cocaine in excess of 400 grams and both weapons charges. Following the verdict, the trial judge sentenced Petitioner to thirty years' imprisonment for trafficking in cocaine and five years' imprisonment for each weapons charge. Each sentence ran concurrently with the others resulting in an aggregate sentence of thirty years' imprisonment. Petitioner then timely filed a notice of appeal and an initial brief.

Factual History

On October 17, 2010, the Charleston County 911 center received an emergency call from Tameika Wilson who claimed to have locked herself in a bedroom after being attacked by her boyfriend. (State's Exhibit #3, R. 577-82). Deputy Jason Bowen and Deputy Julius Alexander of the Charleston County Sheriff's Office were dispatched to 1956 Old Fort Avenue where Wilson claimed she was located. (R. 25, 111, 260, State's Exhibit #3). The 911 call was made from a cell phone that was subsequently disconnected which prohibited law enforcement from calling the number back. (R. 57, 114). When Bowen and Alexander arrived at the Old Fort Avenue address, they observed a vehicle parked in the driveway. The deputies knocked on the door, but received no response. (R. 27-28). Bowen and Alexander then moved to the back of the house and noticed a sliding glass door was slightly ajar. (R. 115). Bowen and Alexander made the decision to enter the home without a search warrant. Bowen articulated his reasoning for entering the home during the following exchange:

Assistant Solicitor Sowards: ...maybe in greater detail you could – can tell (sic) the judge why did you feel it necessary to enter the home at that point?

Bowen: With a domestic situation, particularly in an in-progress on-going situation, the information that we had that a woman was fearful enough to have locked herself in the bathroom, we didn't know if there might be a person harmed in the residence that needed aid or some type of harm actively occurring that we needed to put a stop to.

Assistant Solicitor Sowards: So you were looking for a potential victim?

Bowen: We were.

Assistant Solicitor Sowards: And would it be fair to say that while that was your goal, you were also looking for any potential suspects as well?

Bowen: Yes, absolutely.

(R. 32, lines 4-18). Alexander offered a similar rationale for why he and Bowen entered Petitioner's residence:

Assistant Solicitor Sowards: And you said going into the residence. What was the purpose of going into the residence?

Alexander: To check the safety of the victim and any other persons that were potentially in the house.

Assistant Solicitor Sowards: Could that have been the apprehension of a suspect?

Alexander: Yes.

Assistant Solicitor Sowards: Or rendering aid to a victim?

Alexander: Yes.

Assistant Solicitor Sowards: Was your primary purpose in entering to search for anything other than a person?

Alexander: No, it was just a protective sweep.

(R. 116-17, lines 23-8).

Bowen and Alexander limited their search to areas of the house where a person could be hiding. (R. 278 313-14). When Bowen and Alexander entered the master bathroom, they saw in plain view a small amount of white powder on top of a digital scale. (R. 278, 313). The officers also discovered guns underneath a bed and a large amount of cash on the floor and inside a bank bag. (R. 33-34). Bowen and Alexander immediately suspected that “there might have been some type of drug activity that had occurred or was occurring at that residence.” (R. 34, lines 5-7). Bowen and Alexander continued their search of the house for the 911 caller or her assailant, but discovered that no one was home. (R. 17). After completing their search, Alexander and Bowen called their supervisor, Andrea Moniz, to seek further instructions. (R. 118). Moniz arrived and performed a field test on the white powder found in the bathroom. The sample tested presumptively positive for cocaine. (R. 444-45).

Approximately fifteen minutes after Bowen and Alexander arrived at 1956 Old Fort Avenue, 911 operator Miriam Cousino noticed a GPS signal from the cell phone call “pinged” on an address near 102 N. Romney Street in downtown Charleston. (R. 167, 577-82). Cousino then notified the Charleston Police Department so they could investigate that location as well. (R. 158-161). However, Bowen and Alexander were never notified about the possible alternate location. (R. 29-30, 160-61). Furthermore, Moniz testified that the protocol of the Sheriff’s Office would have required Bowen and Alexander to enter Petitioner’s property to search for a victim or suspect even if they had been made aware of a GPS signal indicating a discrepancy in location. (R. 444).

Detective Thomas Plyer of the Charleston County Sheriff’s Office was contacted and asked to obtain a search warrant. Plyer and Lieutenant Fletcher Ferguson obtained and executed the search warrant and found approximately two kilograms of cocaine inside Petitioner’s residence. (R. 365-67, 419-20). The suspected drugs were collected and tested by Anita Moore of the City of Charleston Police Department and determined to be cocaine. (R. 411). Officers also located a residential lease in Petitioner's name along with Petitioner's birth certificate and social security card inside the residence. (R. 323-24, 348, 353). Petitioner did not challenge the search warrant at trial. (R. 334-35).

STANDARD OF REVIEW

“When reviewing a Fourth Amendment search and seizure case, an appellate court must affirm if there is any evidence to support the ruling.” State v. Wright, 391 S.C. 436, 442, 706 S.E.2d 324, 326 (2011). “The appellate court will reverse only when there is clear error.” State v. Missouri, 361 S.C. 107, 111, 603 S.E.2d 594, 596 (2004).

ARGUMENT

I.

The Court of Appeals properly affirmed the trial judge’s ruling admitting the drug evidence found inside Petitioner’s home because law enforcement lawfully entered Petitioner’s home under the exigent circumstances of locating and assisting a victim of an ongoing domestic violence attack or locating a suspect of domestic violence.

Petitioner contends the Court of Appeals erred in affirming the trial judge’s decision to admit the drug evidence found inside Petitioner’s home because law enforcement’s warrantless entry into Petitioner’s home was not reasonable under the exigent circumstances exception to the Fourth Amendment. On the contrary, Law enforcement lawfully entered Petitioner’s residence to search for a potential victim inside in need of immediate assistance, or an assailant. The warrantless entry was objectively reasonable for law enforcement to ensure that no one inside was in immediate danger. During their search for a victim or assailant, Bowen and Alexander noticed what they suspected to be cocaine in plain view. Once they completed their search for a potential victim or assailant, law enforcement waited until a search warrant could be obtained before searching any further inside Petitioner’s home. Law enforcement’s entry into Petitioner’s home was reasonable under the exigent circumstances exception to the Fourth Amendment.

The Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution protects “the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures.” U.S. Const. amend. IV. Similarly, the South Carolina Constitution also protects citizens “against unreasonable searches and seizures and unreasonable invasions of privacy.” S.C. Const. art. I, § 10. However, the Fourth Amendment only prohibits unreasonable searches and seizures. State v. Foster, 269 S.C. 373, 378, 237 S.E.2d 589, 591 (1977). “Therefore the touchstone of the Fourth Amendment is reasonableness.” Florida v. Jimeno, 500 U.S. 248, 250 (1991). “To be reasonable is not to be perfect, and so the Fourth Amendment allows for some mistakes on the part of government officials, giving them ‘fair leeway for enforcing the law in the community’s protection.’” Heien v. North Carolina, 574 U.S. 54, 60-61 (2014)(quoting Brinegar v. United States, 338 U.S. 160, 176 (1949)). “Generally, a warrantless search is per se unreasonable and violates the Fourth Amendment prohibition against unreasonable searches and seizures.” State v. Weaver, 374 S.C. 313, 319, 649 S.E.2d 479, 482 (2007). However, a warrantless search “will withstand constitutional scrutiny where the search falls within one of several well-recognized exceptions to the warrant requirement.” Id.

One of the recognized exceptions to the warrant requirement is the exigent circumstances doctrine. “The exigent circumstances doctrine provides an exception to the Fourth Amendment’s protection against warrantless searches, but only where from an objective standard, a compelling need for official action and no time to secure a warrant exist.” State v. Abdullah, 357 S.C. 344, 351, 592 S.E.2d 344, 348 (Ct. App. 2004). “A warrantless search is justified under the exigent circumstances doctrine to prevent a suspect from fleeing or where there is a risk of danger to police or others inside or outside a dwelling.” State v. Herring, 387 S.C. 201, 210, 692 S.E.2d 490, 495 (2009). “One exigency obviating the requirement of a warrant is the need to assist persons who are seriously injured or threatened with such injury.” Brigham City, Utah v. Stuart, 547 U.S. 398, 403 (2006).

Here, law enforcement received a call from a female caller who reported that she was seeking refuge in a bathroom from an ongoing domestic attack. (R. 11, 32, 577-82, State’s Exhibit #3). Bowen and Alexander each testified that an ongoing domestic violence attack is a dangerous situation for both a potential victim and for law enforcement. (R. 32, 116-17). Alexander opined that a domestic violence call was one of the more dangerous calls that law enforcement receives and called such calls “the number one cop killer.” (R. 112, line 12). This particular call carried a heightened urgency because the phone call had been disconnected. (R. 57, 114). Alexander feared that the caller could be “harmed or tied up or even death (sic) at that point.” (R. 114, lines 16-17).

It is objectively reasonable for law enforcement to enter a home without a warrant to prevent an attack that is in progress. Petitioner argues the trial judge erred in admitting the evidence found in Petitioner’s home because law enforcement saw nothing on the scene that corroborated the phone call. (Petition for Writ of Certiorari 10). Petitioner’s argument establishes an impossible standard for law enforcement to follow that is not required by our State or Federal Constitutions. Law enforcement is not expected to be perfect, nor are they held to a standard of omniscience. Law enforcement does not have to wait outside a residence where they think an ongoing assault is taking place or may have taken place until they hear a noise coming from the house or get someone to answer the door as Petitioner argues in his petition to this Court (Petition for Writ of Certiorari 10). Bowen and Alexander would have been negligent if they had remained outside during an ongoing assault. Bowen and Alexander properly entered Petitioner’s home in order to prevent what they believed to be an ongoing assault.

Petitioner further argues that any exigency was negated because 911 operator Miriam Cousino subsequently noticed a discrepancy in the location of the cell phone that made the 911 call. However, Petitioner ignores the fact that this discrepancy was not discovered until approximately fifteen minutes after Bowen and Alexander arrived at Petitioner’s address. (R. 167, 577-82). Furthermore, Petitioner also ignores the fact that neither Alexander nor Bowen knew about the GPS discrepancy. (R. 29-30, 160-61). At trial, Petitioner acknowledged that the GPS discrepancy was never reported to Bowen or Alexander. (R. 166). However, on appeal, Petitioner attempts to impute knowledge of the discrepancy to Bowen and Alexander based on what a 911 operator discovered 15 minutes after Bowen and Alexander arrived at Petitioner's residence. Even if Bowen and Alexander had learned of the discrepancy, their supervisor testified that the protocol of the Sheriff's Office would have required them to enter the property to search for a victim or suspect anyway. (R. 444). Judge Young properly recognized that it was objectively reasonable for Bowen and Alexander to enter Petitioner's home when he made the following ruling during the suppression hearing:

The Court: And I think there's plenty of evidence based on what I heard today that says they had exigent circumstances to go into that house to look to see if there was, in fact, somebody who was the victim of a domestic violence crime.

(R. 172, lines 7-11). Because there is evidence in the record to support Judge Young's ruling, the Court of Appeals did not err in affirming his ruling.

II.

Because Petitioner did not challenge the validity of the search warrant used to search his home at trial, any issue relating to the validity of the search warrant or evidence seized pursuant to the search warrant is not preserved for appeal. However, the evidence seized from Petitioner's bathroom was properly admitted against him pursuant to the plain view exception to the warrant requirement because its incriminating nature was immediately apparent to law enforcement. However, even if the trial judge erred in admitting the evidence found in Petitioner's bathroom, any error was harmless because the majority of the drugs introduced against Petitioner at trial were obtained as the result of a properly executed search warrant.

Petitioner next argues the Court of Appeals erred in affirming the trial judge's ruling admitting the evidence found in Petitioner's home because law enforcement exceeded the scope of their search under the plain view exception to the Fourth Amendment by conducting a field test on the white powder found in Petitioner's bathroom. Accordingly, Petitioner argues the positive field test was improperly used as a basis for the search warrant. Petitioner's argument fails for three reasons. First, Petitioner did not challenge the validity of the search warrant at trial. (R. 334-35). Therefore, any issue as to the validity of the search warrant and whether the trial judge erred by admitting the results of the search warrant is not preserved for appeal. If Petitioner had challenged the sufficiency of the search warrant, the presence of white powder on a scale with money and guns lying on the floor would have been sufficient for a magistrate to find probable cause existed to search the residence regardless of whether law enforcement had performed a field test on the powder. Secondly, to the extent Petitioner is arguing the trial judge erred in admitting the results of the field test or erred in admitting the drugs found on the scale in Petitioner's bathroom<sup>1</sup>, the trial judge appropriately denied Petitioner's motion because the drugs found on the scale in Petitioner's bathroom were properly seized under the plain view exception to the warrant requirement. Bowen and Alexander had a right to be in Petitioner's home to search for a victim or suspect of domestic violence, and the incriminating nature of the white powder on a scale with money and guns on the floor was immediately apparent to them. (R. 34). Therefore, law enforcement was entitled to immediately seize the suspected drug material and perform a field test on it. Third, even if the trial judge erred in admitting the cocaine found on the scale or the results of the field test, any error is entirely harmless because approximately two kilograms of cocaine were subsequently found inside Petitioner's residence pursuant to a search warrant that Petitioner did not challenge. (R. 365-67). Therefore, the results of the trial would not have been any different had the small amount of drugs on the scale or the field test been excluded.

<sup>1</sup> The record is not clear as to the weight of the drugs on the scale, but the first bag entered into evidence most likely contained the cocaine found on top of the scale because it was photographed next to the positive field test swab. The first bag entered weighed approximately 41 grams. The majority of the two kilograms were found elsewhere in the house. (R. 365-67).

Error Preservation/Waiver

“In order for an issue to be preserved for appellate review, it must have been raised to and ruled upon by the trial judge. Issues not raised and ruled upon in the trial court will not be considered on appeal.” State v. Dunbar, 356 S.C. 138, 142, 587 S.E.2d 691, 693 (2003). A defendant who expressly consents to the admission of evidence in a trial waives that issue on appeal. State v. Johnson, 298 S.C. 496, 498, 381 S.E.2d 732, 733 (1989). “The rule is well established that if asserted errors are not presented to the lower Court, the question cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.” State v. Freiburger, 366 S.C. 125, 135, 620 S.E. 2d 737, 742 (2005). “Our law is clear that a party must make a contemporaneous objection that is ruled upon by the trial judge to preserve an issue for appellate review.” State v. Sheppard, 391 S.C. 415, 420-21, 706 S.E.2d 16, 19 (2011).

Petitioner did not preserve any objections to the search warrant or the drugs found pursuant to the search warrant because he did not challenge the search warrant at trial. (R. 334-35). However, even if preserved, law enforcement would have secured a search warrant even without a field test being done. See Nix v. Williams, 467 U.S. 431, 444 (1984) (“if the government can prove that the evidence would have been obtained inevitably and, therefore would have been admitted regardless of any overreaching by the police, there is no rational basis to keep that evidence from the jury in order to ensure the fairness of the trial proceedings.”). The combination of white powder on top of a digital scale along with money and guns being found on the floor was enough evidence for a magistrate to find probable cause to search Petitioner’s home for drug related material.

Plain View

“Under the plain view exception to the warrant requirement, objects falling within the plain view of a law enforcement officer who is rightfully in a position to view the objects are subject to seizure and may be introduced as evidence.” Wright, 391 S.C. at 443, 706 S.E.2d at 327. To satisfy the plain view exception, two requirements must be met: “(1) the initial intrusion which afforded the authorities the plain view was lawful and (2) the incriminating nature of the evidence was immediately apparent to the seizing authorities.” Id.

Here, the cocaine in Petitioner’s bathroom was found by law enforcement during a lawful intrusion to Petitioner’s home to search for a victim of domestic violence or a possible assailant. As previously argued in this return, law enforcement’s intrusion was objectively reasonable based on the exigency of preventing an ongoing domestic attack. Once they were inside Petitioner’s residence, law enforcement saw white powder in plain view on a digital scale in the bathroom. (R. 278). Based on the combination of white powder on top of a scale along with money and guns lying on the floor, law enforcement immediately suspected that some type of drug activity may be occurring at Petitioner’s residence. (R. 34). Bowen and Alexander then appropriately seized the white powder in Petitioner’s bathroom and performed a field test<sup>2</sup> on it. (R. 278, 313-14). Because law enforcement appropriately seized the suspected drug material, they did not exceed the scope of the plain view exception by performing a field test on the powder.

<sup>2</sup> Even if the incriminating nature of the white powder had not been immediately apparent, the field test performed by law enforcement did not infringe on any legitimate privacy interest of Petitioner. See United States v. Jacobsen, 466 U.S. 109, 123 (1984) (“A chemical test that merely discloses whether or not a particular substance is cocaine does not compromise any legitimate interest in privacy....Congress has decided-and there is no question about its power to do so-to treat the interest in ‘privately’ possessing cocaine as illegitimate; thus governmental conduct that can reveal whether a substance is cocaine, and no other arguably ‘private’ fact, compromises no legitimate privacy interest.”)

Harmless Error

An “error without prejudice does not warrant reversal.” State v. King, 367 S.C. 131, 136, 623 S.E.2d 865, 867 (Ct. App. 2005). “No definite rule of law governs this finding; rather, the materiality and prejudicial character of the error must be determined from its relationship to the entire case.” State v. Mitchell, 286 S.C. 572, 573, 336 S.E.2d 150, 151 (1985). “Where a review of the entire record establishes the error is harmless beyond a reasonable doubt, the conviction should not be reversed.” State v. Thompson, 352 S.C. 552, 562, 575 S.E.2d 77, 83 (Ct. App. 2003). “Error is harmless when it could not reasonably have affected the result of the trial.” Mitchell, 286 S.C. at 573, 336 S.E.2d at 151 (quoting State v. Key, 256 S.C. 90, 180 S.E.2d 888 (1971)). “The admission of improper evidence is harmless where the evidence is merely cumulative to other evidence.” State v. Kirton, 381 S.C. 7, 37, 671 S.E.2d 107, 122 (Ct. App. 2008).

Even if the trial judge had excluded the field test and the cocaine found on top of the scale, the remaining two kilograms of cocaine found inside Petitioner’s home would still have been admitted against him at trial. As previously noted, Petitioner did not challenge the search warrant at trial. (R. 334-35). Therefore, any evidence that was seized as a result of the search warrant would have been admitted against Petitioner regardless of the trial judge’s decision to admit the drugs found by Bowen and Alexander. Approximately two kilograms of cocaine were found as a result of the search warrant. (R. 365-67). Two kilograms is equal to two thousand grams. Accordingly, the amount of cocaine introduced against Petitioner well exceeded the four hundred gram amount for which Petitioner was standing trial. It is unlikely the jury would have failed to convict Petitioner if the field test or small amount of cocaine found in the bathroom were suppressed by the trial judge. Any error by the trial judge in admitting the results of the field test or the cocaine in the bathroom was harmless.

III.

The Court of Appeals properly affirmed the trial judge's ruling admitting the drug evidence found inside Petitioner's home because the evidence was found pursuant to a validly executed search warrant and not pursuant to a violation of S.C. Code § 16-25-70. However, even if the trial judge had admitted the evidence pursuant to a violation of S.C. Code § 16-25-70, the evidence was properly admitted pursuant to S.C. Code § 16-25-70(H)(1)(a) because law enforcement was pursuing a suspect of domestic violence.

Finally, Petitioner claims the Court of Appeals erred in affirming the trial judge's decision to admit the evidence found inside Petitioner's residence because the evidence was found in the course of a domestic violence investigation. Accordingly, Petitioner argues the evidence does not meet the requirements for admissibility under S.C. Code § 16-25-70(H). Petitioner's argument fails for two reasons. First, the evidence discovered in Petitioner's home was not seized as a result of a warrantless search pursuant to S.C. Code § 16-25-70(H), but rather it was seized pursuant to a search warrant issued by a magistrate. However, even if the evidence was discovered as the result of a warrantless search administered pursuant to a violation of S.C. Code § 16-25-70, the evidence was nonetheless admissible under S.C. Code § 16-25-70(H) because it was discovered in a room where officers were pursuing a suspect. Thus, the evidence found in Petitioner's home was admissible under the plain language of S.C. Code § 16-25-70(H)(1)(a).

S.C. Code § 16-25-70(A) provides law enforcement with authority to arrest a person without an arrest warrant if the law enforcement officer has probable cause to believe that a domestic violence offense has been committed. S.C. Code § 16-25-70(A). S.C. Code § 16-25-70(C) gives law enforcement authority to enter the residence of a person when effecting a warrantless arrest, if law enforcement has probable cause to believe that action is necessary "to prevent physical harm or danger to a family or household member.” S.C. Code § 16-25-70(C).

Thus, the statute contemplates warrantless entry of a residence to effect a warrantless arrest. If law enforcement makes a warrantless entry, then S.C. Code § 16-25-70(H) address the admissibility of evidence discovered during that entry. S.C. Code § 16-25-70(H) reads as follows:

(H) Evidence discovered as a result of a warrantless search administered pursuant to a complaint filed under this article is admissible in a court of law:

(1) If it is found:

- (a) In plain view of a law enforcement officer in a room in which the officer is interviewing, detaining, or pursuing a suspect; or
- (b) Pursuant to a search incident to a lawful arrest for a violation of this article or for a violation of Chapter 3, Title 16; or

(2) If it is evidence of a violation of this article.

An officer may arrest and file criminal charges against a suspect for any offense that arises from evidence discovered pursuant to this section.

Unless otherwise provided for in this section, no evidence of a crime found as a result of a warrantless search administered pursuant to a complaint filed under this article is admissible in any court of law.

S.C. Code § 16-25-70(H). If an officer does not enter a person’s home under the authority of S.C. Code § 16-25-70(C), Section S.C. Code § 16-25-70(H) does not apply. State v. Cannon, 336 S.C. 335, 339, 520 S.E.2d 317, 319 (1999).

Here, the evidence seized inside Petitioner’s home was admissible pursuant to a validly executed search warrant. Bowen and Alexander responded to 1956 Old Fort Avenue in reference to a caller reporting an in-progress domestic attack. (R. 32). The officers used the exigent circumstances of the domestic violence call to enter Petitioner’s home without a warrant. However, Petitioner was not charged with a violation of S.C. Code § 16-25-70. Therefore, the provisions of S.C. Code § 16-25-70(H) are inapplicable to the evidence found in Petitioner’s home. Bowen and Alexander witnessed a white powder on a scale in plain view in the master bathroom. (R. 278, 313). Rather than continue to search Petitioner's residence for drugs and drug paraphernalia, Bowen and Alexander contacted Plyler to secure a search warrant. (R. 419). Plyer and Ferguson obtained and executed the search warrant and found approximately two kilograms of cocaine. (R. 365-67, 420). Petitioner did not challenge the validity of the search warrant at trial (R. 334-35). Petitioner stood trial for the two kilograms of cocaine that was found inside his house, not the minimal amount that was found on a scale in his bathroom. The two kilograms of cocaine that were admitted against Petitioner at trial were found during the execution of a search warrant, not the initial search of Bowen and Alexander in response to a domestic violence call. Prior to getting a search warrant, Bowen and Alexander appropriately limited their search to areas where a person could be hiding because they were responding to a domestic violence call rather than searching for drugs. (R. 278, 313-14). The only drugs found during the initial search of the home was the small amount of cocaine found in plain view on the scale. Therefore, if the trial judge erred in refusing to suppress any of drugs found in Petitioner's home pursuant to S.C. Code § 16-25-70(H), it would only be the small amount of cocaine found on the scale in Petitioner's bathroom and not the two kilograms of cocaine for which Petitioner was tried and convicted.

Even if all of the cocaine in Petitioner's home was found as a result of a warrantless search pursuant to S.C. Code § 16-25-70, the trial judge appropriately admitted the drugs under the exception in S.C. Code § 16-25-70(H)(1)(a). Section 16-25-70(H)(1)(a) provides that evidence discovered as a result of a warrantless search is admissible if it is found "in plain view of a law enforcement officer in a room in which the officer is interviewing, detaining, or pursuing a suspect." S.C. Code § 16-25-70(H)(1)(a). Here, Bowen and Alexander were pursuing a suspect. (R. 32, 116-17). Petitioner argues that “Bowen and Alexander were not interviewing, detaining, or pursuing a suspect because there were no persons present inside or outside of the residence when they arrived.” (Petition for Writ of Certiorari 16). Petitioner’s argument is illogical. Bowen and Alexander could not determine that no one was inside the residence until they went inside the residence to search for a victim or an assailant. Just because law enforcement did not find anyone inside does not mean they weren’t pursuing a suspect when they entered the house. Bowen and Alexander each testified that their primary concern in entering the house was locating a victim or a suspect. (R. 32, 116-17). Therefore, they were pursuing a suspect when they entered the bathroom and saw suspected cocaine in plain view.

CONCLUSION

For all the foregoing reasons, it is respectfully submitted that the petition for a writ of certiorari should be denied.
